

ALI Council Approves Six Project Drafts at October Meeting

During its meeting in New York City on October 18 and 19, the ALI Council reviewed drafts for seven Institute projects. Drafts or portions of drafts for six projects received Council approval, subject to the meeting discussion and to the usual prerogative to make nonsubstantive editorial improvements.

On October 18, Reporter Barry Friedman of New York University School of Law, with Associate Reporters Tracey L. Meares of Yale Law School, Christopher Slobogin of Vanderbilt University Law School, and Brandon L. Garrett of Duke University School of Law (participating by telephone), presented Council Draft No. 2 of Principles of the Law, Policing, consisting of Chapter 1 on definitions and general principles, Chapter 3 on police encounters, Chapter 4 on policing in the absence of individualized suspicion, and Chapter 11 on police questioning. The Council approved Chapter 1 and §§ 3.01-3.06 of Chapter 3, but there was insufficient time to consider § 3.07 on searches incident to arrest and Chapters 4 and 11. In response to comments from project participants, the Reporters will make a number of changes that will be incorporated into their next draft. The project will be on the agenda for the Council's January 2019 meeting.

Goodwin Liu of the Supreme Court of California (Children and the Law session)

Judith A. Miller (Compliance session)

Reporter Geoffrey P. Miller of New York University School of Law and Associate Reporters Jennifer H. Arlen, also of NYU School of Law, and James A. Fanto of Brooklyn Law School submitted their first Council Draft for Principles of the Law, Compliance, Risk Management, and Enforcement. Council Draft No. 1 contains Chapter 1, Definitions; Chapter 2, Subject Matter, Objectives, and Interpretation; Chapter 3, Governance; and Chapter 5, Compliance. The Council discussed

Preparing for Our 100th Anniversary

In 2023, The American Law Institute will celebrate its 100th anniversary. As befits an organization better known for the meticulousness of its work than for its ability to turn on a dime, the planning efforts are already well underway under the direction of a spectacular committee co-chaired by our current President, David Levi, and our past President, Roberta Ramo. In turn, the committee is divided into three subcommittees: on commissioning a history of the ALI, chaired by Edward Cooper and Diane Wood; on planning the celebratory events, chaired by Paul Friedman and Larry Kramer; and on charting a course for our second century (or at least for the early portion of that century), chaired by Yvonne Gonzalez Rogers, Margaret Marshall, and Troy McKenzie. While many of our plans for the anniversary are still being developed, I thought that it would be useful for me to share our current thinking at this early stage. As an administrative law scholar, I am a fan of notice-and-comment proceedings and would very much welcome ideas from our members before any of the arrangements become set in stone.

Our history subcommittee is likely to ask a dozen or so historians and legal scholars to each write a chapter about some aspect of the ALI's work. Some of these chapters will probably focus on particularly influential projects, such as the Restatements of Torts and Contracts, the Model Penal Code, and the Uniform Commercial Code. Others will probably look at the role of the ALI as an institution. I am particularly interested in understanding better the role, if any, that the ALI played in some of the key legally based transformations during the 20th century, such as the civil rights movement and the New Deal. 2018 Updates to Trial Manual 6 Are Now Available

ALI Continues Its Efforts to Provide Assistance to Public Defenders

In 2016, authors Anthony G. Amsterdam and Randy Hertz released the Sixth Edition of the Trial Manual for the Defense of Criminal Cases, an update of the widely used guide for handling criminal court cases. The Manual, last published in 1988, is designed as a how-to-do-it exposition for the general practitioner of the law and practice of criminal defense. It gives the lawyer who is relatively inexperienced in criminal proceedings a compact guide through the stages of a criminal case, from arrest and investigation to appeal. It identifies critical points in the proceedings, warns of rights to be asserted and interests to be protected at each stage, describes the practices and procedures necessary or useful for the assertion of those rights and the protections of those interests, and, in both narrative and checklist form, suggests steps to be taken or considered by defense counsel at the various stages.

Professors Amsterdam and Hertz have updated the Sixth Edition with their 2018 Supplement. Public defenders may request a free electronic copy of the Manual and 2018 Supplement. Please email communications@ali.org to request the free PDF Volumes.

From the authors:

The primary goal of the Manual has always been – and continues to be – to serve as a resource for criminal defense lawyers at the trial level. It covers the information a defense attorney has to know, and the strategic factors s/he should consider, at each of the stages of the criminal trial process. It is organized for easy access by practitioners who need ideas and information quickly in order to jump-start their work at any given stage.

The Manual is a thoughtfully conceived, well-organized, easy-to-read guidebook on the process of handling a criminal case, from arrest to appeal. Threading the needle of serving the novice and the experienced lawyer is always a challenge in the writing of professional manuals, as is finding the right balance in addressing federal and state rules of procedure and practice in a justice system that involves thousands of police departments, prosecutor offices, courts, and jails and prisons. The Manual does this well in providing the basic guidance, insights into complex and sophisticated issues, and references to sources with more comprehensive discussions of particular issues.

A BRIEF HISTORY

In 1967, A Trial Manual for the Defense of Criminal Cases was published by the ALI-ABA Joint Committee on Continuing Legal Education. The product of the combined effort of the ALI-ABA Joint Committee, the American College of Trial Lawyers, and the National Legal Aid and Defendant Association, the Manual was designed for use in Course of Study to be conducted throughout the country and as a working document for lawyers involved in the defense of persons accused of crime.

Authored by Anthony G. Amsterdam, Bernard L. Segal, and Martin K. Miller, the Manual consisted of three parts. The first was an Outline of the Criminal Defense Process; the second was a treatise-like discussion of the substantive content of the Outline titled ‘Guidelines for Criminal Defense;’ the third was a Selected Bibliography of Criminal Procedure, keyed directly to the Outline.

It was introduced in loose-leaf form to facilitate (1) local annotating and (2) periodic updating to keep it current. The planned use of the publication was for local legal educational organizations and bar associations to interfoliate local annotations covering both substantive and procedural local law, and for their cosponsorship of Courses of Study based on the Manual.

The American Law Institute is proud to work with authors Amsterdam and Hertz on the continued publication of this widely relied upon work, and will continue to provide free access to public defenders who may not otherwise be able to afford access to yearly updates.

To date, ALI has granted access nearly 6,000 times.

approached these matters in the past might help us reflect on how to deal with similar transformative events in the future.

As to the anniversary events, the core of our celebration will take place in Washington, DC, during the Annual Meeting in May 2023. We will devote one of the Meeting's days for programming focusing on our past and our future and will have a large celebration reception at a spectacular venue yet to be determined. In addition, during 2022 and 2023, we plan to host four to six regional events around the country, with substantive programs examining features of our work. For these regional events, we will try to have a traveling exhibit of ALI historical materials, prepared with the assistance of the University of Pennsylvania Law School Library, which manages our archives.

Over the last year, we have been busily involved with the efforts to chart our future. In this connection, the ALI's leadership has had many conversations with members about our current work and the types of projects that the ALI should do in the future. Should we depart significantly from our current mix of Restatements, Principles, as well as our ongoing attention to the Model Penal Code and the Uniform Commercial Code? How should we deal with new technologies that have significant legal underpinning, like artificial intelligence, autonomous vehicles, and drones, but not yet much case law addressing them? Can our work benefit from the analysis of "big data"? What are the implications for the work of the ALI on increasing pressure on rule-of-law values? And we have discussed whether our deliberative process continues to be well suited for areas of law that are changing rapidly. The conversations have also explored how members, particularly those who live far from the East Coast, can become more productively engaged with the ALI's work.

The ALI primarily relies on its members for their experience, analytical abilities, and judgment. Fundraising campaigns are a rare occurrence: the last one took place in the 1980s. But it is important at this time to secure the ALI's programmatic and financial future, particularly in light of possible declines in our royalties in the future resulting from market transformations. Thus, as part of the anniversary effort we will launch an ambitious development campaign supervised by a committee chaired by Judith Miller. While the precise contours of our fundraising priorities are still being worked out, I wanted to share with you an early peek at our thinking.

In connection with our substantive work, we will want to address certain pressing social problems that have strong legal underpinnings or dimensions, even though these projects are unlikely to yield us the revenues we derive from traditional Restatements. Our Principles projects on Data Privacy, Policing, and on Student Sexual Misconduct: Procedural Frameworks for Colleges and Universities fall in this vein. But we also need to continue focusing on our core competencies, such as completing the Restatement Third of Torts and revising the Model Penal Code. These Restatements and Codes are still of the utmost importance and complexity. We have found that the best way to assure quality and timeliness is by assembling teams comprising multiple Associate Reporters working with a Reporter—a departure from the traditional model of a single Reporter. This significant commitment of resources has proven its value. Moreover, we believe that in our global economy, undertaking transnational projects, like our ongoing Principles for a Data Economy, which we are doing jointly with the European Law Institute, will become even more compelling.

We also need to enhance the opportunities for our members to participate in our substantive work. In this connection, a very high priority is to significantly increase the resources we provide for members of the judiciary, the public sector, and private nonprofits to attend our meetings; indeed, we derive our legitimacy from the broad participation of members across the whole breadth of the legal profession and we absolutely cannot let financial barriers stand in the way of representing diverse sectors of the profession in our deliberations. We also are committed to exploring uses of technology that might help our members engage more productively with our substantive work.

Another important priority is to increase our work's influence. We need to make sure that our Restatements are available to courts, particularly trial courts in certain states that no longer can afford electronic subscriptions that include our materials. We also need to effectively raise the awareness of our work in the legal profession—for example, through conferences and other events focusing on recently completed projects—and engage with the next generation of legal scholars, which we currently do through our Early Career Scholars Medal.

As in all fundraising campaigns, we will eventually have an official launch, when we will announce the campaign's goal. But, also as in all campaigns, this public phase is preceded by a silent phase. For us, the silent phase started on July 1, 2016. So, any financial contributions that we currently receive, including annual fund gifts, sustaining member dues, and bequests will count towards the campaign's goals.

Being able to plan for a second century is, by itself, a significant sign of success. Most institutions do not find ways of remaining relevant and influential for such a long period of time. And it is a success for which we should all take great pride. It is also a wonderful opportunity to think about how to ensure that our successors, a hundred years from now, will be in at least as good a position as we are to plan for their next century.

Chapters 1 through 3 but did not have time to consider Chapter 5, and no vote was taken on the draft. The Reporters will revise Chapters 1 through 3 pursuant to the meeting discussion and include the revised Chapters in their draft for the January 2019 Council meeting.

Reporters Florencia Marotta-Wurgler of NYU School of Law and Omri Ben-Shahar of the University of Chicago Law School presented Council Draft No. 5, containing all nine provisions of the proposed Restatement of the Law, Consumer Contracts. The Council approved Council Draft No. 5, subject to the discussion at the meeting and the usual editorial prerogative. The Reporters agreed to revise the draft to address comments received from project participants as well as comments made during the Council's discussion; the revised material will be submitted at the 2019 Annual Meeting.

On October 19, Council Draft No. 3 of Restatement of the Law, Children and the Law, was presented by Reporter Elizabeth S. Scott of Columbia Law School and Associate Reporters Richard J. Bonnie of the University of Virginia School of Law, Emily Buss of the University of Chicago Law School, Clare Huntington of Fordham University School of Law, Solangel Maldonado of Seton Hall University School of Law, and David D. Meyer of Tulane University Law School. Council Draft No. 3, comprising three Sections on parental authority to make decisions about a child's associations with a third party, one Section on state intervention for parental neglect, two Sections on school authority to exercise control over students for misbehavior, and two Sections on juveniles' right to counsel in delinquency proceedings, was approved by the Council.

Reporter Christopher Jon Sprigman of NYU School of Law and Associate Reporters Lydia Pallas Loren of Lewis & Clark Law School, R. Anthony Reese of University of California, Irvine School of Law, and Molly S. Van Houweling of University of California, Berkeley School of Law, submitted Council Draft No. 2 of Restatement of the Law, Copyright, containing five Sections from Chapter 1, Subject Matter and Standards, and three Sections from Chapter 2, Scope of Protection. Section 1.01, Basic Requirements for Copyright Protection, was presented for discussion only. The Reporters explained their planned revisions to the draft in response to comments received prior to the meeting. The Council approved §§ 1.02, 1.06, 1.07, and 1.08, covering types of works protected by copyright law and the basic requirement of originality, including independent creation and minimal creativity; it also approved §§ 2.01 and 2.02, covering copyright protection of expression. The Council discussed, but did not vote on, § 2.07 on scènes à faire. The Reporters will revise the approved Sections pursuant to the meeting discussion, and the revised material will be included for reference in the next Council Draft.

The Council also approved Council Draft No. 5 of Restatement of the Law Third, Torts: Intentional Torts to Persons, presented by Reporter Kenneth W. Simons of the University of California, Irvine School of Law, and Associate Reporter W. Jonathan Cardi of Wake Forest University School of Law. Sections submitted for approval were § 1, Comment H (battery and implied-in-law consent), §§ 1, 4, 5, and 7 (excerpts of consent provisions for specific torts), § 12 (categories of consent that preclude liability), §§ 13-15 (actual consent), § 16 (apparent and presumed consent), § 17 (emergency doctrine), § 18 (consent to sexual conduct), § 19 (medical treatment without legally effective consent as battery), § 20 (general principles for privileges), and §§ 30-34 (privilege to defend land or personal property).

Reporter Matthew L.M. Fletcher and Associate Reporter Wenona T. Singel, both of Michigan State University College of Law, and Associate Reporter Kaighn Smith, Jr., of Drummond Woodsum submitted Council Draft No. 5 of Restatement of the Law, The Law of American Indians, consisting of §§ 44-46 and 47-51 on the Indian Child Welfare Act and similar state laws, §§ 58-62 and 64-66 on Indian tribes as economic actors, and §§ 100-108 on Indian Country criminal jurisdiction. The Council approved Council Draft No. 5, subject to the meeting discussion and the usual editorial prerogative.

The Institute in the Courts: State Supreme Courts Adopt Restatement Sections

The highest courts of two states recently adopted Sections of the Restatement of the Law Second, Torts and Restatement of the Law Third, Torts: Liability for Physical and Emotional Harm. Summaries of those opinions follow.

In Ruble v. Carrier Corporation, 428 P.3d 1207 (Wash. 2018), the Supreme Court of Washington adopted the “apparent manufacturer” doctrine as set forth in Restatement Second, Torts § 400 for common-law product-liability claims predating Washington’s 1981 Tort and Product Liability Reform Act (“WPLA”).

In that case, the surviving spouse of a machinist who died of mesothelioma, individually and as the personal representative of decedent’s estate, converted decedent’s personal-injury action into a wrongful-death action against, among others, the parent corporation of the entity that had manufactured, sold, and distributed asbestos-containing products decedent had used. The spouse sought to impose liability on the parent corporation as an apparent manufacturer under Restatement Second, Torts § 400, alleging that the parent corporation represented itself as a manufacturer of the products that caused decedent’s mesothelioma. The trial court granted the defendant’s motion for summary judgment, finding that a reasonable purchaser would not have been induced to believe that the defendant was an apparent manufacturer of the products within the meaning of § 400. The court of appeals affirmed.

Reversing the court of appeals and remanding for further proceedings, the Supreme Court of Washington held that genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether a reasonable consumer could believe that the defendant was a manufacturer of the asbestos products that caused decedent’s illness and death. The court “formally adopt[ed] § 400 and recognize[d] the apparent manufacturer doctrine for claims arising before the WPLA’s effective date,” and explained that, in determining whether a nonmanufacturing entity such as the defendant was an apparent manufacturer under § 400, it would adopt the “objective reliance” test, which depended on the perception of a reasonable consumer who actually used the products such as decedent, rather than a sophisticated industrial purchaser of the products such as decedent’s workplace. The court explained that its adoption of this Section built on the court’s general acceptance of Restatement principles in similar contexts, including its adoption of §§ 402A and 388, was in accord with the clear majority of jurisdictions to consider § 400 and to formally adopt it, and was consistent with Washington statutory law, given that apparent-manufacturer liability was adopted in the WPLA and “[t]he apparent manufacturer doctrine articulated in § 400 is entirely compatible with our state’s statutory product liability law.”

The dissent noted that it agreed with the majority that, in the right case, Washington should adopt § 400’s “apparent manufacturer” doctrine and that the “objective reliance” test was the correct test under Washington law, but disagreed with the way the majority applied that test, arguing that, where the ordinary consumer of the product was not the ordinary purchaser, the test should be applied from the perspective of the ordinary purchaser.

In State v. Roache, 2018 WL 6004927 (Iowa, Nov. 16, 2018), the Supreme Court of Iowa adopted the scope-of-liability analysis in Restatement of the Law Third, Torts: Liability for Physical and Emotional Harm §§ 29 and 33 for criminal restitution cases.

In that case, the state charged a suspect with 11 counts after he was apprehended in possession of property stolen from several victims’ parked vehicles. The trial court accepted the suspect’s guilty pleas to one count of criminal mischief and one count of burglary, and sentenced him to an indeterminate prison term not to exceed five years for criminal mischief and two years for burglary, with the sentences to run concurrently and with credit for time served. The trial court dismissed the remaining counts but ordered the defendant to pay restitution on all 11 counts. The defendant filed a written objection to two items, including $1,900 for a stolen paperback study guide for a training course for commercial-truck drivers that was in a victim’s stolen backpack, which was the amount of the fine for loss of the study guide that the operator of the training course had assessed against the victim but not yet collected from the victim. The trial court ordered, among other things, the defendant to pay the $1,900 for the study guide. The court of appeals affirmed the trial court’s restitution award in full.

The Supreme Court of Iowa vacated the court of appeals’ decision and reversed the trial court’s restitution order as to the $1,900 award for the study guide. The court expressly adopted the risk standard in §§ 29 and 33, which limited the scope of an actor’s liability by requiring consideration of, among other things, whether the harm at issue was a result of any of the risks created by the actor’s tortious conduct, in the context of criminal-restitution determinations. The court noted that, previously, in Thompson v. Kaczinski, 774 N.W.2d 829 (Iowa 2009), it had adopted Restatement Third, Torts: Liability for Physical and Emotional Harm § 29’s risk standard for civil tort actions, and explained that “[l]iability for intentional torts extends to a broader range of harms than merely negligent conduct,” as provided in § 33. In examining the defendant’s challenge to the $1,900 award, the court concluded that the trial court erred by awarding the amount without substantial evidentiary support, explaining that, among other things, this unpaid fine alone was insufficient to support the restitution award, because there was no evidence that the operator of the training course intended to attempt to collect any amount from

Annual Report and Appeal

By now you should have received The American Law Institute's Annual Report in the mail, which highlights the most notable achievements of our 2017–2018 fiscal year. Letters from President David F. Levi and Director Richard L. Revesz reflect on the Institute's recently completed and ongoing projects and thank the dedicated Reporters, Advisers, and members who play a crucial role in the drafting process. President Levi and Director Revesz also look toward the future with ALI's 100th anniversary celebration.

As ALI approaches its second century of law-reform work, financial support from our members is key. One of ALI's greatest strengths is our ideological and financial independence, which we are able to maintain because of broad, enthusiastic support from our limited membership.

We hope every member, with the future in mind, will make an end-of-year charitable contribution to ALI by completing and returning the gift card that accompanied the Annual Report, or the envelope that is included in this edition of The ALI Reporter. Donations to the Institute can also be made online at www.ali.org/makeagift, or by calling Kyle Jakob, Development Manager, at 215-243-1660.

Thank you in advance for your generosity. Best wishes for a happy and healthy 2019.

Project Spotlight: Restatement of the Law, Charitable Nonprofit Organizations

A great deal of wealth in the United States is controlled by charitable nonprofit organizations. These entities dominate fields such as education, health care, religion and social services, while they play prominent roles in the arts and many other areas. Applicable legal structure descends from the law of wills, the law of trusts, and the law of for-profit partnerships and corporations, among others. Yet, an authoritative statement of the law in charitable nonprofit organizations does not exist. The law of charities, drawn as it is from various other parts of the law, in many aspects remains confusing and incomplete. It is difficult for somebody who has not worked in this field to manage all these sources. This is the basis for the Restatement.

The Restatement of Charitable Nonprofit Organizations is designed to provide guidance on the legal issues faced by nonprofit institutions. The Council approved the start of this project as a Principles project in 2000. It later approved changing the project to a Restatement in 2014. The change was appropriate for several reasons. During the drafting process, it became clear that the drafts were primarily reflecting the law as it is, noting where there are conflicts, explaining alternative approaches, and discussing the rationale for the decision when one approach was chosen over another. The Council decided that, consistent with ALI's traditional practice, the Restatement label should be used for projects that seek to provide guidance to the courts and where there is an established body of positive law. In contrast, the Principles label is appropriate for projects where the main intended audiences for the Institute's guidance are institutions other than the courts, such as legislatures, administrative agencies, or private actors. Under this categorization, this project belonged on the Restatement side of our ledger and the Council approved the name change.

The Restatement of Charitable Nonprofit Organizations includes six Chapters. Chapter 1 deals with Definition and Choice of Form; Chapter 2 with Governance; Chapter 3 with Changes to Purpose and Organization; Chapter 4 with Gifts: Solicitation, Restrictions on Charitable Assets, and Enforcement of Pledges; Chapter 5 with Government Regulation of Charities; and Chapter 6 with Standing of Private Parties.

Pending approval by ALI Council in January 2019, the remaining Sections of this project will be presented at the 2019 Annual Meeting for membership approval, marking the completion of this project. We look forward to comments from our members at the Annual Meeting, and if approved, congratulating our Reporters and project participants on their extraordinary work on this important and timely project.

Below is a more detailed projected Table of Contents with notes on which Sections have been approved. The colored text denotes Sections that have not been presented to the membership for approval.

Conflict of Laws

November 9 in Philadelphia, PA

Participants discussed revisions of previously submitted Chapter 8 on Contracts, and one new Topic from Chapter 5 on Choice of Law (Topic 3, Procedure). The Council approved §§ 2.08-2.09 and 5.01-5.08 in October 2017. Chapter 1 and §§ 2.01-2.07 were approved by the Council in January 2017. Members may access Preliminary Draft No. 4 online to learn more about the topics addressed at this project meeting.

the victim beyond whatever the defendant was required to pay in court-ordered restitution.

The dissent argued that the trial court's restitution award should be upheld as supported by substantial evidence, noting that, "[a]s the court ultimately recognizes, this is an issue of damages, not scope of liability." The dissent pointed out that the Restatement Third, Torts: Liability for Physical and Emotional Harm did not address damages for intentional torts to property, and thus relied on Restatement Second, Contracts § 356 and Restatement Second, Torts § 927 for support, as did the majority.

The Institute is currently working on portions of the Restatement Third of Torts: Intentional Torts to Persons.

Member Spotlight: Neil B. Cohen

We sat down with Neil B. Cohen, the Jeffrey D. Forchelli Professor of Law at Brooklyn Law School. An ALI member since 1987, Neil's contribution to the Institute's work comes in many forms.

He currently serves as a Reporter for Principles for a Data Economy, a joint project of the ALI and the European Law Institute, and served as the Reporter for Restatement of the Law Third, Suretyship and Guaranty, for which he held the R. Ammi Cutter Reporter's Chair from 1994 to 1997. Established in honor of R. Ammi Cutter, the Cutter Chair is occupied by an active Reporter of proven effectiveness.

Neil serves as the Director of Research of the Permanent Editorial Board for the Uniform Commercial Code and has been a member of several drafting committees for revising various articles of the UCC, including the most recent revisions of Articles 1, 3, 8, and 9, and was Reporter for the complete revision of Article 1 completed in 2001.

In 2014, ALI presented Professor Cohen with the John Minor Wisdom Award, given in recognition of a member's contributions to the work of the Institute.

How did you first become interested in commercial law?

I don't think I knew the field of commercial law existed when I started law school. In fact, it wasn't until my second or third year that I took some courses in the field that got my attention. I probably took the first course almost by accident, not really knowing what it was about; but then I found the area interesting and that the type of legal thought and methodology required was something that I really liked, especially the use and application of rather complex statutes.

The methodology of commercial law seemed to mesh well with the way I approached a lot of legal matters, so it resonated with me. After law school, I went into practice for a few years with a law firm in Boston. About half of what I did at the firm involved commercial law: secured lending, sales of goods, and the like. I was able to take what I had learned in law school and then apply it in the practical context in which those legal doctrines are used. This was very educational for me – in law school I had learned quite a few rules and principles of commercial law, but in the absence of the context in which the world uses them.

When were you introduced to the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC)?

I started studying the UCC in law school, when it was still relatively new. I went to law school in the 1970s and, while the UCC was primarily written in the late '40s and into the 1950s, it wasn't widely enacted until the 1960s. In fact, it wasn't until the mid and late '60s that it had swept the U.S. I was in law school in the '70s, so the UCC was considered a recent innovation. I found it interesting both for the matters it governs and how it does so; I found the internal logic of the Code and the types of interconnection between various doctrines interesting and very timely.

Then, when I went into private practice, I had the opportunity to apply the rules and principles of the UCC, and I saw how they could be used not only retrospectively in the context of solving problems or resolving disputes about situations that had already arisen, but also prospectively in the context of advising clients about the legal rules governing transactions still in the planning stages. This enabled me to gain a much better sense of how well-crafted legal rules can give predictability and certainty to the law, something that reduces costs of transactions, reduces risks, and is pretty good for all of us.

While I was practicing commercial law, the world of commerce was changing all around us because that's the nature of innovation. As a result, when I went into academia, and had a chance to look at things from a broader perspective, I was able to see that some of the rules that I thought were modern and cutting-edge were actually falling behind the developments of commerce and technology.

I became a member of the ALI in the 1980s, which was very fortunate for me. That was when the sponsoring organizations of the UCC (the ALI and the Uniform Law Commission) were recognizing that, while the UCC was a great advance when it was drafted and enacted, it was becoming a bit musty and out of date. After all, 20 years is a long time in a world of transactions. Accordingly, an effort had recently begun to modernize the UCC – to examine every Article of it to determine if it needed tweaking, adjustment, large scale amendment or total rewriting. Because I was lucky enough to become involved in the ALI while that process was ongoing, I had the opportunity to participate in that generation's modernization of the UCC.

This was not only tremendously exciting but quite an opportunity to see the process of modernization of law. We had to face questions such as: How do you take old doctrines that worked in the past but may not be well-adapted to current transactions and current technology and adapt them to work in the present and survive into the future? How do you learn about what needs to be changed and what should stay constant? If changes are necessary, how do you make decisions about what the changes should be? How do you craft changes that are acceptable enough to be enacted and accepted on a substantially uniform basis across the country? It was quite an education for me.

You served as the Reporter on Restatement of the Law Third, Suretyship and Guaranty. How did that come about?

One of the very prominent members of the ALI in the 1980s and 1990s was a gentleman named Donald Rapson. He was primarily a commercial finance lawyer, very public spirited and committed to the development of commercial law in a manner that served the public interest. He and the ALI Director at the time, Geoffrey Hazard, knew each other quite well. Don convinced Geoff Hazard that the ALI ought to consider restating the law of suretyship and guaranty because it was an area that was quite important in commerce but had largely disappeared from law school curricula and was not well understood by most lawyers, yet it was something that many transactional lawyers used every day without a great understanding of it.

Before asking the Council to formally approve the preparation of a Restatement, though, Geoff asked a few academics, including me, to prepare an analysis of the area highlighting where the ALI could add value. In his letter to me about this project, Geoff informed me that I was not the only person from whom he was seeking such an analysis and that he would use the analyses he received as part of his process of deciding who the Reporter should be. That added an extra element to the assignment, because the prospect of being a Reporter was both daunting and exciting at the same time. I submitted my analysis in the spring of 1990. Then, in early July, when I was on a family vacation, Geoff tracked me down at a motel in Ohio, where I was visiting relatives. (I never found out how he knew I was there.) The phone rang, and it was a call from Geoff asking me to be the Reporter for the project. I was honored and excited, and had no idea how much it would affect the rest of my career.

Being a Reporter is very time consuming work. It's very challenging work, but it's also very exciting work. You get to think about things at both a detailed level and a broad level; you immerse yourself in concepts enough to get an understanding of them and then try to find a way to organize them in a way that's consistent with the traditions of the legal system, yet improves them, states them clearly, and identifies the direction in which the law is heading. The drafting process is exciting and terrifying at the same time.

How is being a Reporter on a Restatement different than being a Reporter on a Principles project?

Well, it's really quite different from a number of perspectives. First of all a Principles project speaks in a different voice than a Restatement does. A Restatement is restating the existing law. It's an endeavor that is more progressive, perhaps, than that word suggests, but it is produced largely by immersing ourselves in the law and doing our best to state it, or restate it, in the most effective way. But it's based primarily on the legal system as it is.

A Principles project, though, is almost by its very nature a reform project of sorts. Unlike a Restatement, it can't be implemented solely by the force of its intellectual power. Rather, it may require legislation or other sorts of changes in the law. A Principles project is the ALI speaking more openly about how the law should develop, or the directions the law should go in in order to effectively govern an area.

The current project is different than most Restatements for another reason—this is very new topic. The data economy is now a multi-billion dollar endeavor, but if we talked about it 10 years ago, it would have drawn a blank stare from most people. It was a smaller portion of the economy then, and hadn't risen to the level of consciousness that it has today. Yet, this massive component of the modern economy is largely governed by rules that were crafted for other purposes, such as the general law of contracts, commercial law, property law, and intellectual property law.

In this Principles project, we're doing the best we can to adapt those venerable principles to this new field. We are thinking not only about what the current legal rules are but what the rules of the future could or should be, especially for a segment of the economy in which transactions cross borders with ease.

As a Reporter you assist in the selection of Advisers. What were you looking for when selecting Advisers for Data Economy?

One of the nice things about the way we do these projects is that we look far and wide for the people who are most likely to provide expertise and insight to the project. We don't limit ourselves just to familiar faces, or just to ALI members. Rather, we do everything we can to try to get the people who will make the project better. The Advisers for the data economy project are a great group. They are excited and interested; they don't hesitate to tell us where we can do better, but they are also supportive. When there is criticism, it is useful constructive criticism.

Project meetings generally run a full work day. From a Reporter's perspective, why are these meetings so important?

One of the enjoyable things about being a Reporter is that you not only need to pay attention to everything the Advisers say, but it's so exciting that you want to pay attention to everything they say. Christiane Wendehorst (the co-reporter from the ELI) and I learn something from every question someone asks and every comment someone makes. Sometimes we learn that we didn't say something as effectively as we thought. Sometimes we learn that we didn't address an issue that people think needs addressing. And sometimes when we have posed a legal question and answered it with a yes, we learn that some thoughtful Advisers think that the answer should be no, so we need to rethink things. The result is a project that is a lot better than if the two of us locked ourselves in a room and wrote it alone.

“The Genius of the Restatements”

As the fall meeting season comes to an end, we now begin preparation for the 96th Annual Meeting.

This year's Meeting agenda will feature several Restatement projects, including two that will likely be presented for final approval by the membership. Although approval at the Meeting marks the completion of our members' hard work on the debate and drafting of Restatements, it is only the beginning of the Restatements' contribution to supporting the rule of law.

The Right Honourable Lord Woolf of Barnes, then-Master of the Rolls of the Royal Courts of Justice, spoke to the ALI membership at the 77th Annual Dinner in 2000. He reflected on Restatements' importance and influence within the United States and abroad. Below is an abridged version of Lord Woolf's Dinner speech. The full speech is available at www.ali.org.

I had, of course, read about the distinction of the Institute without coming here, but the time I have spent—and it has been a very short time that I have spent with you—has made me realize that the Institute is an extraordinary institution. It is quite remarkable the interplay which takes place between the members of the Institute who are judges, the members of the Institute who are academic lawyers, and above all, the members of the Institute who are practitioners. The Institute, in my belief, is performing a unique role, a role which I do not believe is performed in the same way by any comparable institution. You have something here which you really should treasure.

Why I think the Institute is respected in the United Kingdom is because of its publications on American law. The Restatements have a huge reputation. It is the first source to which a foreign lawyer turns if he wants to know about United States law.

The Restatements help us to develop our own law. This morning I was attending the discussion on the paper on Restitution, and I learned, which I fully accept, that until you published your paper on Restitution we did not even know that we had a law of restitution. You, of course, may have forgotten since that time that you have a law of restitution, but the fact of the matter is that it is the buzz subject in my jurisdiction.

I know that the Restatements will not be to everybody's taste. Lewis Carroll's Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, as you will remember, asked, “What is the use of a book ... without pictures or conversation?” I have been searching, but I have yet to find a Restatement which has either pictures or conversations. I hope that next year that state of affairs will be remedied.

However, all legal systems today suffer from at least two complaints: The law is overcomplex, and the position is that it is too uncertain. One of the real problems facing appellate courts today is information overload. More and more decisions are being reported, and more and more authorities are being cited, so there is a real danger of courts being drowned in a sea of authorities. To have a bible to which you can cling, a sort of life belt, for lawyers and appellate judges must be marvelous. Oh that I was a judge of your Supreme Court and only needed to look at the Restatements.

The great achievement, as it seems to me, of the Restatements is that in an area of the law they provide a code, but they do not provide it in the form of legislation which is inflexible and rigid. They provide it in a form which allows it to develop and therefore does not stultify the strength and the greatness of the common law, and that, it seems to me, is the genius of the Restatements. They carry conviction because of the consultative process which takes place in their production, the sort of discussions that I have been able to witness while I have been here. It is remarkable that these Restatements are being continuously produced.

As the economy becomes global, and the United States, of course, has been a leader in bringing that about, so must our legal systems. There is more that we have in common than that which divides us. We have to continue to learn from each other. There are today bigger challenges facing the legal systems of the world than probably ever before. I have already referred to the fact that our citizens are demanding more from us than ever before. They are concerned by problems of access to the legal systems. They are concerned about the problems of rising crime, to which we seem not to have the right answers. I do not believe they are happy when they see more and more people being incarcerated for longer and longer at greater expense, depriving other services of the community of the resources which they need.

We are going to have to be able to meet these challenges. They are important for our citizens, they are even more important for those jurisdictions which have not the good fortune to have the advantages we have. The common law applies in a great number of countries where, unfortunately, the legal system is under huge pressure. Some of those countries are former colonies of the United Kingdom, where judges and members of the profession are trying to maintain the standards which they learned from us, and we have to set them an example and provide them with support. It can be an extremely lonely job being a judge, or even a practitioner, in some of these countries if you are trying to do your best to maintain the standards to which I have referred. If they are to maintain their integrity, if they are to maintain their independence, by setting them an example we can help them. We can provide them with the courage or help them to have the courage that they need to perform their difficult tasks.

I think this Institute has a huge contribution to make. Perhaps when I leave tomorrow to go back to England the thing that I will take away with me that is most important is the fact that the Institute is looking outside the United States. It is looking at the impact of what it is doing on the reforms in other jurisdictions. It is not taking an insular view but taking a broad view. That, I believe, is what we must continue to do.

ALI to Celebrate Its New Life Members: the Class of 1994

In May, The American Law Institute will welcome a new class of Life Members—the Class of 1994. Each year, ALI members who have contributed 25 years of service to the Institute are granted Life Member status. Life Members are no longer required to pay dues or adhere to the Institute’s participation requirement, but they continue to enjoy all the rights and privileges of elected membership.

The Class of 1994 will be honored at a special luncheon held during the 96th Annual Meeting, which will feature remarks by 1994 Class Member Lee H. Rosenthal, Chief Judge of the U.S. District Court of the Southern District of Texas. New Life Members are given the opportunity to commemorate this quarter-century milestone by contributing to the 1994 Life Member Class Gift, which will be presented to the Institute by the 1994 Life Member Class Gift Committee during the luncheon.

The 1994 Life Member Class Gift campaign will be chaired by 1994 Class Member John H. Beisner of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, LLP. As of the publication of this article, fellow class members Mark R. Killenbeck of University of Arkansas School of Law, William J. Perlstein of BNY Mellon, and Stuart H. Singer of Boies Schiller Flexner LLP, have joined Mr. Beisner on the special committee for the campaign.

Now in its eighth year, the Class Gift program has raised more than $1,000,000 to support key aspects of ALI’s mission, including the MCG Travel Assistance program and the Judges & Public-Sector Lawyers Expense Reimbursement program—two vital components of the Institute’s efforts to minimize financial barriers to member participation. These important programs have thus far provided 326 members more than $290,000 in assistance to attend project meetings and Annual Meetings.

The Class Gift initiative also provides funding for the Early Career Scholars Medal and annual conference program, which raises awareness of the Institute’s work while engaging up-and-coming legal academics. Additionally, as ALI continues to expand the breadth of its law-reform endeavors, the Class Gift program helps cover some of the costs associated with maintaining the high level of quality that distinguishes the Institute’s work.

The 1994 Life Member Class Gift campaign is now underway. For more information about the campaign, please contact Development Manager Kyle Jakob at 215-243-1660 or kjakob@ali.org. To learn about ALI’s other ongoing fundraising initiatives, please visit www.ali.org/support.

Notes About Members and Colleagues

Bruce A. Ackerman of Yale Law School received an honorary doctorate in jurisprudence from the University of Trieste in Italy in recognition of his distinguished contributions to comparative constitutional law.

In Property Law and Human Flourishing (Oxford University Press), Gregory S. Alexander of Cornell Law School develops a theory that connects ownership and human flourishing with obligations, and discusses the implications for a wide variety of property issues of importance both in the literature and in modern society.

On Oct. 1, Lady Justice Mary Arden DBE joined the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom. She is one of three new appointments to the Court.

Omri Ben-Shahar of the University of Chicago Law School and Florence Marotta-Wurgler of NYU School of Law presented the welcome address at the Humboldt European Law School's conference "An ALI Restatement on Consumer Contract Law – The European Perspective." The event included a series of lectures addressing topics related to the Restatement of the Law, Consumer Contracts.

NYU Law Review, the Guarini Institute for Global Legal Studies, and the Institute for International Law and Justice at NYU School of Law held a symposium entitled "Data Law in a Global Economy" on Nov. 9. ALI participants at the event included NYU School of Law faculty Richard R.W. Brooks, Rochelle C. Dreyfuss, Jeanne C. Fromer, Florence Marotta-Wurgler, Jason M. Schultz, Christopher Jon Sprigman, and Katrina M. Wyman, as well as Paul M. Schwartz of UC Berkeley School of Law.
